Anthem to host veterans event

NORTH PHOENIX — Anthem parade officials expect a large turnout at Saturday's Veterans Day parade.

The Daisy Mountain Veterans Parade will start at 10 a.m. at King Drive, move north on Gavilan Peak Parkway, dart east on Anthem Way and then south to Freedom Way.

Parade goers can expect to hear the Army's marching band, catch a glimpse of Arizona Buffalo Soldiers Grand Marshal Alfred Brunson, view a tiny unit of potential young Marines and see a large group of north Phoenix students walk to honor family veterans.

"Everybody should be there by 9 a.m. for a good view," said Mary Ann Derryberry, parade chair of the Daisy Mountain Veterans Parade & Family Picnic. "There is nothing commercialized about our parade. It's all about our veterans."

Derryberry said the parade is scheduled so it will not compete with Wednesday's Phoenix Veterans Day parade.

A picnic and entertainment after the parade will be at Venture Way and south of the ball fields.

Police charity helps track team

PHOENIX — The non-profit fundraising arm of Phoenix Law Enforcement Association donated $1,000 to the Teleos Preparatory Academy in Phoenix to provide clothing, equipment and physical examinations for the school's track team.

Representatives from the labor union's PLEA Charities said they targeted underprivileged third- and fourth-graders at the central Phoenix school, 1401 E. Jefferson St. PLEA represents about 2,500 rank-and-file Phoenix police.

Teleos, a non-profit school, educates students from Grades 3 through 8. PLEA President Mark Spencer said his organization partnered with Teleos for an "investment in the future and development of underprivileged children."
